A better approach to workforce health

Nearly all of our centers are located on or near medical campuses, offering convenient access to specialists, pharmacy, X-rays, physical therapy, and more. All of our occupational health physicians are either board certified or board eligible in occupational medicine or a related specialty. Occupational health physicians, nurses, care coordinators, and case managers specialize in the unique challenges of work-related injuries. And all providers have real-time access to members’ electronic health records, enabling them to coordinate treatment and help members stay on top of their health.

“A Center of Occupational Health and Education

As one of only 6 Centers of Occupational Health and Education (COHE) in the state, Kaiser Permanente (formerly Group Health) employs occupational health best practices and works effectively to improve injured workers’ health and reduce disability. The result? Your workers will be able to get back to work in a safe, timely manner.
